Notable features:

The corner buildings 901 and 903 are so rearranged as to be undatable, but are likely same as number 905. Cowan's undertaking establishment, founded 1880, is carefully maintained in the manner of such business establishments. The formstoned exterior with its "colonial" overhang is ugly but, one presumes, immutable. An early two story with dormer house is buried in the whole at 905. The house next to the recreation center is in good repair.

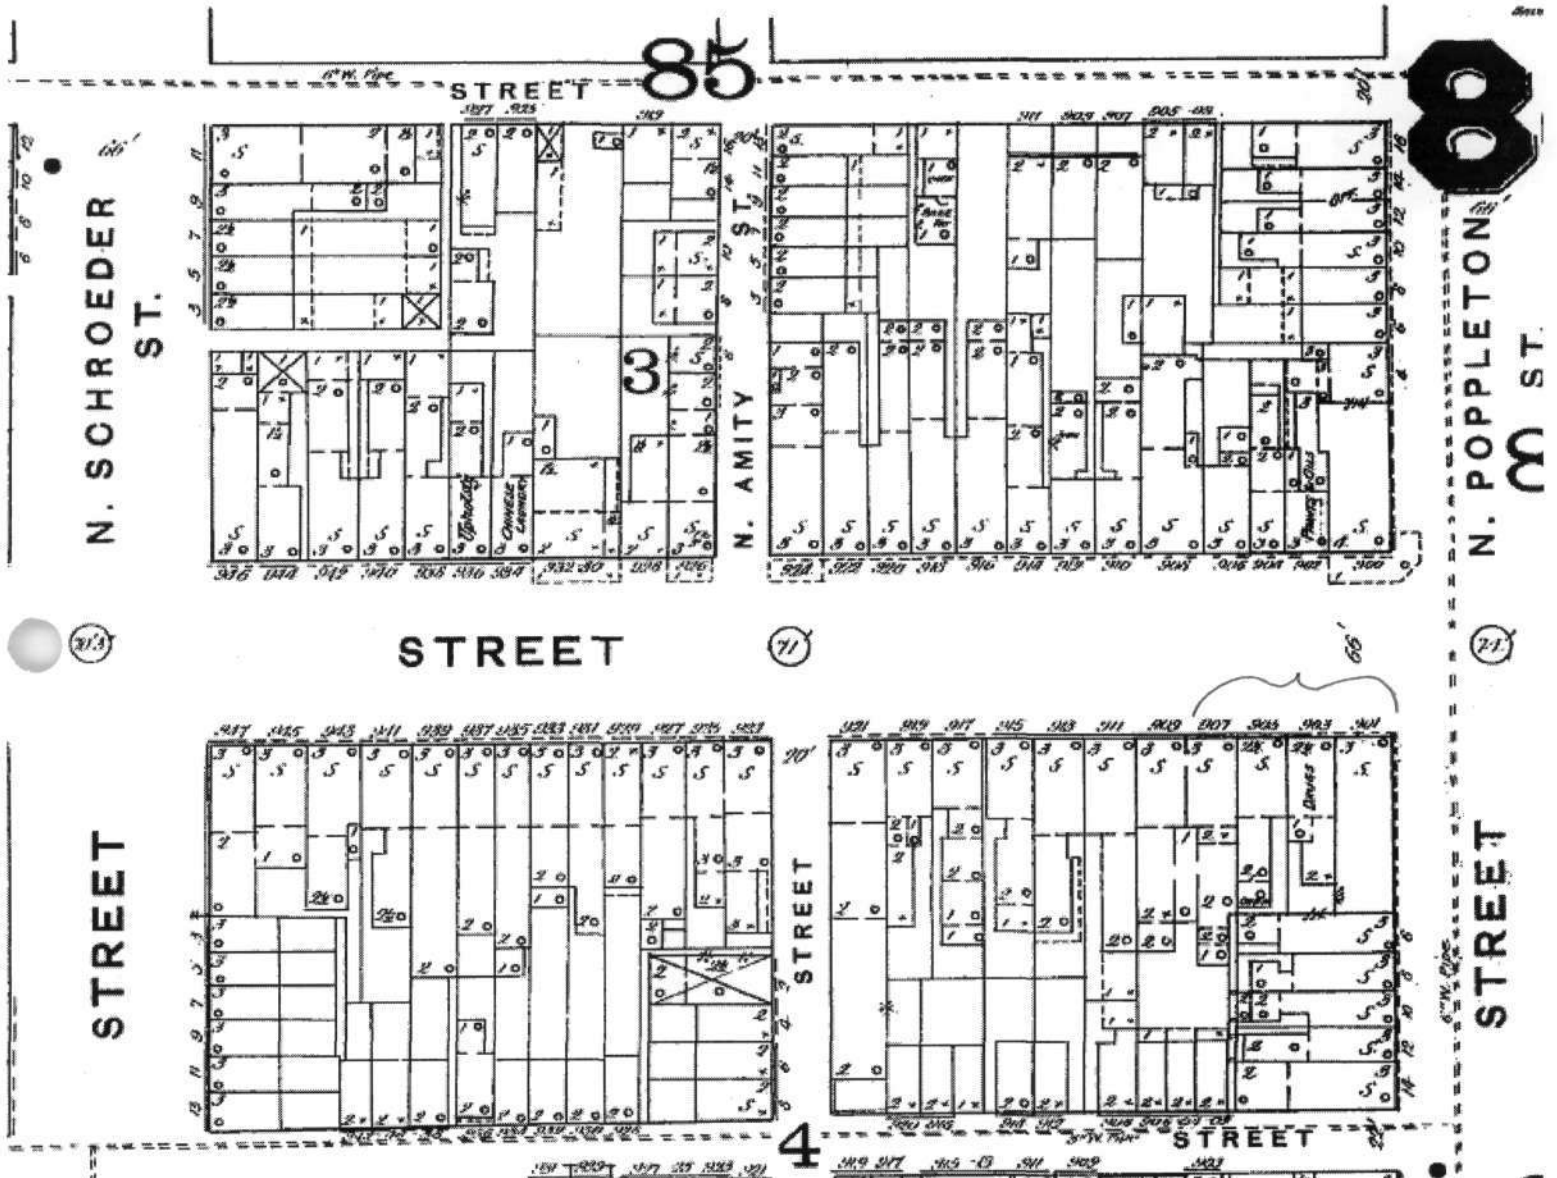

The one-story, modern building west of 907 is the James C. McHenry Recreation Center, built in 1957, prior to the school.

Environmental context:

Diagonally opposite St. Peter's Church, next to the vast school yard to the west and across-street from industrial building. Trees would help ameliorate the formstone and other unfortunate mixtures of building materials.
